III. Grammar and Word Usage: 20%. Please choose the best answer.

"1 aboard!" shouted the conductor. No sooner had I climbed onto the train 2 it began to move forward. Just in time! I felt glad. I had just come from a tough day at work and I was eager to sit down, 3, and read my newspaper, as I did every day on my commute to and 4 work. I settled comfortably into my soft seat in first class.

I opened my newspaper and spread it wide to block from my vision the single other traveler in the compartment 5 across from me. I was in my own happy world. Outside, the train noise was a quiet hum. It was good to be able to afford to travel first class.

IV. Reading Comprehension: 10%. Please choose the best answer based on the reading.

Imagine you're considering taking a vacation to Italy. You need to gather some information about the cities you'll visit, and maybe find some guide books about some museums and landmarks you'd like to see. Furthermore, you also need to purchase an airplane ticket and book your seat. You want to know what kind of clothes to wear, so you need to find out what the weather will be like during your stay. Then you need to find a small, inexpensive hotel and reserve a room. Last but not least, you also need to get in touch with your Italian pen pal to tell her when to pick you up at the airport.

Prior to the development of the Internet, to accomplish all these things, you'd have to visit a library, a bookstore, a travel agent and the post office. You'd also have to make several expensive long-distance phone calls. But today, with a personal computer and an Internet connection, you could find all the required information and make all of your arrangements without even stepping outside your house. There's only one small obstacle: practically all the information you'd find on the Internet is in English. Not only are the computer programs that make the Internet run written in English-based computer languages, but over 90% of the "pages" on the World Wide Web are written exclusively in English. So, if your English isn't up to scratch, over nine-tenths of the Internet is off-limits to you.

The Internet was invented in the United States and the majority of leading-edge Internet companies are based in California, so it's no wonder that the Internet is dominated by English. What is surprising, though, is that nearly half of the people who use the Internet do not speak English as their first language. A recent survey showed that almost 44% of Internet users spoke a language other than English as their native language, and the number of non-native English speakers on the Net is growing fast. Japanese, Spanish and German-speakers each account for almost eight percent of Internet users, while Chinese-speakers make up almost four percent of total users. Nowadays, people from countries all over the globe are staying in touch in English over the Internet.

So, what does this indicate? It means that English is going to be even more important in the future than it is at present. The Internet is set to become the most important tool of international commerce and communications and if you can't use English—the language of the Internet—you won't have access to this revolutionary tool.
