II. Cloze Test : Choose the best answer to fill in the blank (40%)

Passage A :

1 I pick my bags to go home, it occurs to me that I have lived longer in Singapore than in any other city save my native Calcutta. Fortuitous 2 may be, but the connection is historic, the contrast stark. Singapore, 3 "the highest urban living standard in the world," to quote 4 the memoirs of U.S. Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, was administered 5 Calcutta, "necropolis, city of the dead and dying, vast, putrefying, forsaken." 6 the first 48 years of its existence. Traces of that connection are hard to find, though in 1993 soon 7 I arrived in Singapore, I once rejoiced to stumble 8 a cast-iron manhole cover that bore Calcutta's imprimatur. It must be gone 9 now--like buses flaunting Tata's telltale "T" and chunky Usha fan regulators--replaced by the global best 10 money can buy.

Passage B :

My six years passed quickly because Singapore does not lie heavy 11 anyone. People come and go, birds of passage 12 a forever-changing but always manicured landscape. It's 13 unlike unkempt Calcutta, which can 14 an addiction. I cannot imagine Alien Ginsberg, 15 spun poetry as he wandered Calcutta's Chow-ringhee, visiting his muse in Raffles Place. 16 Singapore lacks gravitas, the dynamism of a city that is constantly regenerating itself is not to be trifled 17 either. Upgrading is a way of life sustained 18 the continuum of demolition and reconstruction. 19 is shopping. I must be unusual, probably unique. 20 I'm not going back laden with "air cons," as they're called in Singlish, and other mod cons.
