肆 閱讀測驗：選一個最佳的答案 10%

Atoms are all around us. They are the bricks of which everything is made. There are millions of atoms in just one grain of salt, but despite their small size they are very important. The way an object behaves depends on what kinds of atoms are in it and how they act. For instance, you know that most solid objects melt if they get heated hot enough. Why is this? It is the effect of the heat on the object's atoms. All atoms move constantly. When they are hot, they move faster. Usually the atoms in an object hold together and give the object its shape. But if the object grows hot, its atoms move so fast that they break the force that usually holds them together. They move out of their usual places so that the object loses its shape. Then we say that the object is melting.

1. The author says the way an object behaves depends on the _____.
 A. kinds of atoms in it B. number of atoms in it
 C. way its atoms behave D. both A and C
2. According to the article, atoms in an object move _____.
 A. only when the object is heated B. whenever they grow hot
 C. unless the object has melted D. at all times
3. An object holds its shape because its atoms _____.
 A. are very hot B. usually hold together C. move very fast D. are not moving
4. When its atoms leave their usual places, we say that an object is _____.
 A. moving B. breaking C. melting D. changing places
5. The possible title of the passage would be _____.
 A. Solid Objects Melt B. Where Atoms Are C. Atoms, Bricks D. Atoms around Us
